Easy Pleasant Way To LOSE FAT

How would you like to lose your fat, increase your energy and improve your health?

How would you like to lose your double chin and your protruding lips and cheeks and at the same time make your skin so clean and clear that it will compel admiration?

Let us the scales today and see how much you weigh. Then get a box of Kruschen Tablets that cost next to nothing and which will let you 4 weeks take one half teaspoonful to a glass of hot water as the water goes down on pastry and fatty meats—go light on potatoes, butter, cream and sugar and when you have finished the contents of this first bottle weigh yourself again.

Notice also that you have gained in energy, you feel younger in body. Kruschen will give you the most precious thing—Refuse fat!—and when you have lost your fat SAFELY the Kruschen way.

NOTE—Many people find that the only diet change necessary while taking Kruschen regularly is TO EAT LESS.

As Maine goes so goes the Nation

THE TIME HAS COME TO MAKE OUR CHOICE

That choice lies between the NEW DEAL with all its foolish experimentation. And that tried and proven form of Constitutional Government under which we of America in the past have enjoyed more liberty and attained a higher standard of living than any other people in the world.

Our choice is not a question of politics, rather it is a question of the personal welfare of the people of this State — and of this Country's social and economic salvation.

No amount of partisan or political argument can erase or change the staggering record of NEW DEAL waste and extravagance.

Of its unfairness and discrimination.

Of its mounting debts — every dollar of which, sooner or later must be paid in taxes by ourselves — by our children — and our children's children.

Of its failure to handle relief for the worthy on an impartial basis.

Of its attempts to use the people's own money for the purpose of keeping itself in office.

Contrast the NEW DEAL record with the pledges of Governor Landon and the Republican party to bring about so far as it lies within their power:

Economy in Government.

The cessation of excessive expenditures and crippling taxation.

Fairness and honesty in the distribution and administration of relief.

To keep open the doors of opportunity to the younger generation so that they may develop each in his own way the American qualities of self-reliance, honesty and generosity.

One of the most important questions to be decided by voters on September 11th is the liquor question.

This is not only a question of economics but it is a moral question as well.

God said to Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden: "You may have any fruit in this garden except the fruit of that one tree which you must never touch;" and even small children know that the forbidden fruit was exactly the one Adam and Eve ate.

We had the identical situation during prohibition. People were told that they must not use liquor in any form and people being only children at heart would not stand for being ordered about and immediately they did use liquor in every form. The United Temperance League will, through its plan for temperance by education, bring about the ideal situation both morally and economically. We believe that the thousands of people put to work through the mal-ligorous industries, saved, by the way, multi billion means beer and distilleries, should be at work, and we believe that the millions of dollars spent for farm products by the manufacturers should be allowed to go to the farmers. We believe that the two hundred million dollars given to the government by the brewers should remain with the government and not with the bootlegger.

Absolute prohibition would lead us back again to bootlegging, racketeering and violent death due to bootleg liquor. Our present situation is an improvement over any past condition that we have had and with important changes we make from time to time, will improve itself immensely.

nearby towns, and only the inhabitants of their towns will go to the shops, but they will do the shopping for their drinks in those towns to the detriment of those who sell "NO" on this question. It is also true that the roads will be filled with drunken drivers and that in this way there is a serious danger. Every city will admit that temperance will offer all the time and the United Temperance League in purpose to carry on an international educational campaign through the next several years to reach the temperance through schools, the youth societies, clubs, the radio, the newspaper and the motion picture. This election is only a preliminary step to start the great work which the League is going to carry on. We need the help of every voter who stands now in order to create a foundation which is firm and will prove as permanently great and durable as light. We must have moral support

CHAPTER VI

IN THE meantime, the throng of neighbors Sybil had precipitatedly left in the village post office had received their mail and reached that anticipated interval for gossip which never failed to be stimulating.

Zenas Henry was speaking: "A mighty fine little girl—that Sybil," commented he. "A high stepper! We'd oughter tie her down to Wilton so she won't go back west. She's too pretty to be spared from the Cape."

"I cager wud have trouble keepin' her here," rejoined Sam Nickerson, the postmaster. "She's got a heart in her home town. Had a letter an' a box of candy from him today. Some writin' an' same postmark on both of 'em. I noticed."

"Didn't by any chance see the name, did you, Elias?" Eleazer Crocker inquired. "Wal, come to think of it, it did catch my eye. You know how such things will flutter. He's called, Horatio Follet."

"Horatio Follet, eh?" Eleazer repeated. "Kinder high soundin'. Wonder who he let. From Allen City, you say?"

Elias nodded. "That was the address."

"Never heard of the place," Capt. Benjamin Todd put in.

Thoughtfully Zenas Henry studied his chin. "If everybody knew where all the blasted places in the country were, what use would they have for maps? 'Twould put the map makin' folks clean out of business. Say, Ephraim," inspired by a bright idea, "you're the mail carrier. You'd oughter be primed on the location of places. Where's Allen City?"

"Allen City? Hanged if I know. Ye hear you talk, anybody'd think 'twas my job to tote round the country deliverin' letters in person at the doors of every house in the United States."

"But you must have a nice notion 'bout geography. Ain't you got me pocket atlas out there?"

"I may have a small map some-where, I carry most everything," Ephraim glanced with deliberation, he began to dig into upon the corner the contents of his many pockets.

"Want to be in my breast pocket?" he asked his hand to his breast. "My eye! If I ain't for get that telegram," he already ex-claimed.

"The station master at Sawyer Falls gave it to me when he handed out the mail. It came went out of my pocket. It's for that chap Heath who's stayin' over at 'The Willows'."

"Didn't you been woolgatherin' you ought to give it to Sybil to take back with her. She was here only a little while ago," Sam Nick-erson said.

"I know it."

"None I was to take it over," Elias Wilcox suggested eagerly. "I've willed it."

"For a start now, I can carry it," Capt. Benjamin Todd piped.

"Now, there's no one to tell you better voluntered," Eleazer Crocker asserted. "You got straight over to Marcella, as it happens, some time or my dinner, as I'll take the telegram."

With an air of authority, he held out his hand.

"The crowd fell back."

Early afternoon found Marcella alone in the Homestead sitting room. Sybil had gone up the beach. Eleazer Heath was asleep, and at last the day's interest of solitude which the woman cov-eted was here.

She could not work. Try as she would, her mind wandered off into byways too fascinating to be resisted—byways which no matter how remote their windings, invariably led her back to Stanley Heath.

In retrospect she lived over again every incident, every word, every look that had passed between them, until she came to the barrier of the unknown which her fancy bridged with intricate rainbow-hued imaginings. She twisted possible explanations this way and that and would contentedly have continued the pastime had not Eleazer Crocker knocked at the door.

Eleazer could not have chosen a more important moment to drag her back to earth.

With a groan and a deep sigh, Marcella went reluctantly to let him in.

"Wal, now ain't it nice to find you by yourself?" was his greet-ing. "The kitchen looks cozy as can be. Where was you settin'?"

"I was in the front room, but perhaps we better drop down here so I can listen in case Mr. Heath should call."

"Anywhere you say. Wherever you are suits me."

"I'll just run in and put the screen round the fire and get my mending," Marcella replied a trifle un-easily. "I'll be right back."

"Left to himself, Eleazer smiled a smile of satisfaction.

The kitchen was warm, Marcella was alone and apparently not busy. Could circumstances be more prop-itious? Put one certainly was with him. Today, this very after-noon, he would take his future in his hands and put to her the ques-tion he had so often determined to put.

When Marcella came back he was

When Marcella Came Back He Was Pained and Ready to Begin His Declaration.

He was ready to begin his de-claration.

"Wal, there's been one, ain't it?" he started out.

Marcella took up her sewing. "No you think not?" questioned she, raising her brows. "Seems to me we've had lots of rain and fog."

"Wal, yes, now you mention it. I do recall a few thick days. Still, spring is comin'."

"I'll like to oblige the south-ern this spring," announced Marcella, giving a disconcertingly practical twist to the conversation. "How many shingles do you suppose it would take?"

Eleazer frowned. The dialogue was not proceeding along the lines he had mapped out.

"I'd have to reckon that out. It's a good notion, though, to make the all right. That's what the birds are doin'. They're gettin' their nests built an' kinder pickin' out their mates."

"I did not realize you were so much interested in birds," Eleazer's Marcella remarked. "I have a few bird books I must lend you. It's in the other room. I'll fetch it."

Springing up, she disappeared.

"That it?" murmured Eleazer. "Should anything be more strange than a bird whether a bird's a robin or a sparrow?" He wandered to the window. "Oh, heavens, who's this comin' in? It ain't Lish. What's that? Now what is thunder does he want, buttin' in?"

Eleazer threw open the door. Before he could speak, however, Eliska puffed and out of breath bawled:

"Where in the name of goodness did you put the engine-house key, Eleazer? Whipple's hen house is afire, an' we've hunted high and low for it."

"My soul an' body," Eleazer gasped. "I don't forget to leave it. Must be in my pocket."

Wildly he began to search.

"You're a fine head of the fire de-partment, you are!" roared Eliska. "If you'd put your mind on town business 'stead of on Marcella Howe, we'd all be better off. Traipsing over here to see her in the middle of the day, palmin' off that tele-gram as an excuse. You better go straight back to the village fast as you can leg it an' carry the key with you."

"Don't wait for nothin'. I'll explain to Marcella."

"But I've got to see her. I've got to speak to her private," protested the wretched official. "I want to give her something."

"Give it to me. I'll hand it to her."

Eliska's extended palm was not to be ignored.

"This—this—telegram," quavered Eleazer. "I ain't had a chance to—"

"Do you mean to say you ain't given her that telegram yet?"

"I was intendin' to. I was just about to when—"

"Wal, of all the—" words failed Eliska. "Here, give it to me," he commanded. "I can be depended on to deliver messages if you can't. I'll see she has it. In the mean-time, the best thing you can do is to hoof it to town quick's ever you can."

"Ain't you comin'?"

"No. Fire's ain't in my line. Long's Marcella's here by herself an' ain't busy, I'm goin' to pay her a call," Eliska grinned. "I've got to deliver the telegram."

"You might be needed at the fire."

"I shan't be," was the calm re-ply. "Not unless there's something criminal about it."

"It might be arson."

"I'll take a chance on it startin' from Dan Whipple's cigarette. In fact he owned as much. Now, hop along, Eleazer, else the whole con-figuration will be out 'fore you get there."

The unlucky fire chief had no choice.

"Drat it!" raged he, as he strode off across the sand. "Drat it! Ain't that just my luck!"

Either the "hook for which Marcella searched" not to be found or she was in a haste to return to her awaiting suitors.

Whatever the explanation, her absence lengthened from a few mo-ments into a quarter of an hour.

In the meantime Eliska, like his predecessor, was formulating his code of attack. Before another scintillated the prize from him be-fore Heath with his yacht and his macrammed alken garments re-covered his strength, he would put his fate to the test.

He strode up to the stove and, standing on the hearth with his back to the fire, rocked back and forth on his heels reflectively.

As he did so, a brick beneath his feet rocked with him.

Eliska looked down.

He saw it was quite loose.

"That thing's goin' to trip up somebody some day," commented he. "It oughter be cemented."

Producing his knife, Eliska pried the brick from its place.

As he lifted it out, a handker-chief came with it disgorgeing at his feet a fat, blue leather case.

If the sheriff's eyes bulged when he caught sight of it, they all but popped from his head when, edged on by curiosity, he pressed the catch on the box.

Quick as a flash the whole situ-ation clarified in his mind.

These were the widely heralded Long Island jewels; and the thief who had stolen them was here beneath this roof!

Of course Marcella did not know. Even though a friendship existed between herself and Heath, she was unquestionably ignorant of the nefarious means by which he earned his living.

Far from cherishing anger or re-sentment toward the person who posed his villainy and prevented her from exercising herself to such an unprincipled adventurer, would she not regard her rescuer with deepest gratitude? Eliska's head whirled.

Nevertheless, confused though he was, it was clear to him he must not make a mis-step and neglect to perform his official duty with dig-nity.

Heath was ill. There would be no danger of his leaving the Home-stead at present, especially as he had no suspicion the jewels had been discovered.

The best plan was for him to re-turn to the mainland; get his badge and handcuffs; find out what for-malities such a momentous event as an arrest demanded; and return later and round up the criminal.

He did not dally. Carefully put-ting the gems back where he had found them, he placed the telegram upon the table and went out, softly closing the door behind him.

It flashed into his mind that as the tide was coming in it might be well to borrow Marcella's boat and row back to shore.

This would serve two purposes. He would reach home sooner; and Heath, cut off by the sweep of the channel, would in the meantime be unable to escape.

Never had Eliska rowed as he roared that day! The dory fairly leaped through the water. Reach-ing shore, he sprang from it and dragged it up on the sand. Then, trembling with excitement, he set out for home.

He was almost at his gate when to his consternation he saw Eleazer puffing after him.

"You 'pear to be kinder stirred up," Lish," Eleazer commented.

"What's the matter?"

Eliska determined upon a sud-den and bold move.

"Say, Eleazer," began he cau-tiously. "Did you ever see a man arrested?"

"Wal, I dunno as I ever did—not really. I've seen it done, though, in the movies."

"That oughter be up-to-date an' proper. Just how was the proceed-in' put through?"

Thoughtfully Eleazer regarded the toes of his boots.

"Wal, near's I can recollect, the policeman went up to the criminal an' grabbin' him by the arm says: 'You villain! I've got you now. Scram!'"

"I s'pose the policeman wore a badge an' carried handcuffs."

"Oh, law, yes. But what's the game? What do you want to know for?"

Fortunately Eliska glanced up and down the empty road and after peering over his shoulder, he dropped his voice to a confidential whisper and hissed:

"'Cause I'm goin' to make an ar-rest—a big arrest! I've tracked down the thief that committed the Long Island burglary. Moreover, I know this very second where the jewels are. I'm goin' to phone the New York police I've got their man," he concluded.

Eleazer's cunning mind worked quickly.

"I don't know, Lish, as I'd do that," he cautioned. "In the first place, you might be mistook in your calculations an' not only get yourself into hot water but make the town a laughin' stock. Further-more, was you wrong, you might get sued for defamin' the accused's character."

"I ain't wrong. I'm right."

"Wal, even so, I'd move careful," urged his companion. "Most likely there's a reward out for this crim-inal. Why split it with a host of others? Why don't you an' me di-vide it? I'll help you land your man, since you're a bit—"

Eleazer, fearing to offend, hesitated, "—a but out of practice 'bout arrestin'."

The advice was good. Eliska, shrewd in his dealings, instantly saw the advantage of the plan pro-posed.

"Wal, maybe 'twould be better if I didn't let too many ignorant city chaps in on a big thing like this," he conceded complacently. "You an' me know what we're about. I agree we could handle it."

"Sure we could. We can put it through in less than shape. First you must change your clothes. For your Sunday ones. A black frock coat. Then you must pin your sheriff's badge on your chest where it'll show good an' plain. Be sure to bring along your handcuffs, 'cause you're certain to need 'em with an experienced criminal such as this. He'll have a gun an' put up a fight."

Eliska paled and a tremor twitched his lips.

"That needn't concern you though. All you'll have to do be to steal up behind him, your pistol 'twixt his shoe blades an' shout: 'Stick 'em!'"

"I ain't got no pistol. I ain't got no revolver. In fact, I don't I ever shot off a revolver in life."

"Wal, I have. I've shot at of skunks."

"You might lend me yours?" "I s'pose I might. It ain't no workin' very well right now, kinder rusty. Furthermore, out of ammunition."

"That won't matter. I ain't calculatin' to fire it."

"But you'll have to."

Eliska's mounding disap- changed to consternation.

"Turning, he faced Eleazer. "Say, Eleazer," he faltered, "we was to make a deal of thing. S'pose for the time be- was to take over your job as was to take over mine. S'pose did the arrestin'?" You seem to a slight more 'bout how to do it than I do."

"You put on the badge; you the thief to stick 'em up; you the pistol 'twixt his shoe blades wherever you think 'twill do most good; an' you snap the cuffs on him. I'll see you an' credit for it. Meanwhile, if you a fire or an undertakin' job, manage 'em somehow."

Eleazer shook his head.

"That wouldn't do, Lish, in the world," he objected. "I can't go swappin' offices with the town. Folks wouldn't be the arrestin'?" You seem to a slight more 'bout how to do it than I do."

 Landon, N. D.—It was early when the President's speech rolled through this town. Roosevelt was asleep. But "Pa" appeared on the rear with a homey message for the crowd. "The old man is here, he can't come out now, but he'll be through here again tomorrow and he'll come out to see you then." At Des Moines, Landon ended his study of the area with a conference of men, including Alfred M. Landon of Kansas, his Republican opponent.

"Man" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon that will be read in all churches of Christ. Scientist. Sunday, September 6, 1936.

The Golden Text is: "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace." (Ps. 37:37).

Among the citations from the Bible is the following: "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. So God created man in his own image. In the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." (Gen. 1:26-27).

The Lesson-Sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science Textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "Immortal man was and is God's image or idea even the infinite expression of infinite Mind, and immortal man is co-existent and co-eternal with that Mind." (P. 236:2-13).

WHAT DO WE GET OUT OF IT?

The question of our having or not having liquor sold in our town must be decided on the 14th of September.

We have experienced some of the results of such sale. We remember how recently drunken men were a unusual sight and until repeat few ever saw a drunken woman. Since repeal and with the coming of beer shops all this has changed.

Drunken drivers and drunken pedestrians are very common. Many of the young people are drinking—girls and boys not infrequently. Children not yet in their teens have been known to drink—to be drunk. Girls and women have been afraid to go out evenings because of drunks, and other evils have developed that please no thinking citizen.

No one gains from the sale of liquor except the seller—and no one deals in this traffic except for selfish gain and to their own loss, eventually.

Our merchants lose by the traffic—money spent for beer does not buy clothing or food.

Accidents are increasingly prevalent. Men and women under the influence of liquor drive recklessly and the officers will not interfere except in case of accident. Officers have watched men whom they know to be intoxicated get into cars and drive—no interference.

If you want these conditions, why should the officials make enemies and trouble by interference?

These conditions are not good. Bethel does not need the beer shop or liquor store. For the children's sake—for the country's sake—for your own sake—Vote No on Liquor Sept. 14th.

In the absence of the Master, Past Master Clifford Cole presided. Interesting remarks were made by the visitors, outlining the work and benefits of the Grange, and a song and encore by Mr. Perham were much appreciated.

The hall was decorated with cut flowers, and refreshments of sandwiches, cake and coffee were served, the committee being Miss Emeline Heath and Mrs. Nell Gross.

LONDON LEADING IN LOCAL STRAW VOTE TO DATE

The total vote of readers in the Citizen presidential poll stands: Landon 15, Roosevelt 1, Thomas 1. The national returns for the week have not been received. The local interest in this straw vote is probably far from representative of the general sentiment, and a wider response will be appreciated.
